President Kim Il Sung is in the hearts of the African people

“In order to make a revolution, one must meet Comrade Kim Il Sung.”

Talking about President Kim Il Sung recently has many praises for his immortal exploits in the history of the Korean nation and even to the entire world. Throughout his life, he went through a journey worthy of appreciation for what he did from an early age, achieving independence from the yoke of the brutal Japanese occupation and fighting fierce wars against the United States of America and its allies. For three years, he won a miraculous victory and shattered the disgraceful myth of the imperialists.

He also waged an intellectual war using the idea of Juche to implement a new approach to building the national economy by means of his own, which made everyone amazed at the speed of achieving the goals. Kim Il Sung, the President of the Democratic People’s Republic of Korea, who was respected by the progressive peoples of the world, achieved complete respect.

The great exploits in achieving the cause of human independence, and in particular, his sublime international cooperation for national liberation and building a new society for the African peoples, whom we are honored to be from that brown continent, became a slogan for the revolutionaries: “In order to make the revolution, one must meet Comrade Kim Il Sung.” This is a belief that the Korean Revolution was a beacon of freedom and independence from the brutal colonialism at that time.

In the mid-fifties of the last century, grave obstacles arose before the national liberation struggle of the Algerian people, which raised the first torch of armed struggle against imperialism and colonialism on the African continent. The people of Algeria rose up valiantly against French colonialism. At this particular time, President Kim Il Sung expressed his support. And his positive support for the Algerian people. At that time, the Korean people were in the difficult battle of reconstruction and construction after the war, in conditions that destroyed everything in the country as a result of the Korean War (1950 - 1953) imposed by the United States of America on this people, so that it was difficult for them to extend a helping hand to others. But President Kim Il Sung actively supported the line of armed struggle of the Algerian National Liberation Front, and presented Honest financial aid for his victory. He was also keen to designate Algeria Day and Algeria Week, in order to express strong solidarity with the struggling Algerian people, and when the Algerian people built an interim government, he meant that the Korean government would recognize it for the first time and establish diplomatic relations with it. In later periods, he continued to strengthen brotherly affection with the leaders of this country and its people, especially with the great President Houari Boumediene during his historic visit to Algeria in May 1975.

President Kim Il Sung's international cooperation, dedicated to the struggle of the African peoples for national liberation in the colonies, is also linked to the national liberation struggle of the Mozambican people.

When President Kim Il Sung met, in September 1971, Samora Moises Machel, head of the Mozambique Liberation Front and commander-in-chief of the People's Liberation Army, during his visit to Korea, he told him that it was not permissible to escape the initiative in the struggle against the imperialists, indicating in detail the trends and ways to go. To gain victory in it. After Machel returned to his country, he worked to consolidate the ranks of the Liberation Front, as President Kim Il Sung indicated, and established secret bases for guerrilla warfare in the virgin forests, and annihilated enemies by relying on them, until he received a historical event that put an end to colonial rule. On the conference podium to declare the country's complete independence, Machel expressed his moved feelings, saying that they were able to cut off the shackles that bound their ancestors' feet and theirs, and welcome the country's liberation, freeing themselves from the fate of slavery, thanks to the great hero Comrade Kim Il Sung, who shed light on their path, and called Those coming to give thanks to him, gathered up the feelings of their ancestors.

In addition to Algeria and Mozambique, many countries, such as Uganda, Zimbabwe and Namibia, are receiving influential events to achieve national liberation and the independence of the country, with the instructions and impartial assistance of President Kim Il Sung.

At that time, the phrase “In order to make a revolution, one must meet Comrade Kim Il Sung” was popularized in Africa as a common term on this continent.

Honest help financially and spiritually

President Kim Il Sung did not spare any help and assistance, materially and morally, to build a new society in African countries as well

It so happened that the President of the Republic of Togo, Gnassingobi Eyadema, who visited Korea in the mid-seventies of the last century, asked him to explain to him the valuable experiences gained in Korea, during his meeting with President Kim Il Sung. At that time, he told him in detail about the experiences of the struggle of the Korean people who established a socialist industrial state based on political sovereignty, economic independence and self-defense, based on the Juche idea, starting with the story of his making a tractor with the strength of the spirit of self-reliance.

Later, he looked at the situation of this country, which was suffering hardship due to its lack of national cadres, and he spoke about building a good high party school in that country as gifts, noting that it should be built in the most splendid way and even by purchasing materials, if it was difficult to transport them from Korea. In this way, the Higher Party School of the People's Union was built in the capital of Togo, which prepares large numbers of competent cadres capable of leading the construction of a new society in the country.

President Kim Il Sung met all the demands of African countries. For example, he sent people with talent, money and materials to build factories and farms. His material and spiritual assistance included all fields, such as politics, military affairs, education, health, sports, not to mention the economy, and its amounts were enormous.

If President Kim Il Sung helped African countries wholeheartedly then, it was not for the enrichment of his country, at all. The President always told his cadres that African countries must be sincerely helped, so that they can achieve complete political and economic independence from the hands of the imperialists, and walk on their own feet, even though we are tightening our belts and suffering hardships.

With his help and cooperation such as this, a number of buildings were erected all over the African continent, including the Arusha Brick Factory, the Cholema House of Agricultural Sciences Research, the Gombani Stadium in Zanzibar, Tanzania, the printing press in Benin, the Dembe Hydroelectric Station in Ethiopia, the Kim Il Sung Agricultural Sciences Research House, and the National Palace. in Guinea, the Juche Demonstration Farm in Ghana, the Chanyana Korean Friendship Demonstration Farm in Zambia, the Lesotho Government Headquarters, the Central African Parliament Building, and the Theater The open air and Revolutionary Torch Tower in Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, the Hall of Culture in Ouidah District of Atlangtiq Prefecture in Benin, and the Unity Stadium in Victoria, the capital of Seychelles.

When the President of Namibia, Sam Nujoma, visited Korea in September 1992, he expressed his feelings of gratitude to the President.

Kim Il Sung stated the following: If Comrade President Kim Il Sung had not taught him wisely, and had not helped him from the bottom of his heart, materially and morally, Namibia would have remained as the only colonial country on the African continent. Comrade President Kim Il Sung, who most actively helped us when we fell into a critical dilemma, is a mentor and a credit to the Namibian people. 1973

Also, we in Egypt, Syria and Palestine do not forget the courageous stances of President Kim Il Sung in supporting the just Arab cause in reclaiming the land stolen from the Zionists with the help of the American imperialists and the West. The people of Egypt, Syria and Palestine have not forgotten the Korean pilots who participated side by side with us in the Cooper War. Glorious.. We do not forget our loyal friends and we remain with them in one trench, hand in hand and heart to heart.. President Kim Il Sung will remain a fragrant memory in the hearts of the Arab peoples and the progressive and peace-loving peoples in the world.. And the exploits of President Kim Il Sung in Africa will remain the best witness to... His loyalty and greatness.

In continuation of giving, we find today President Kim Jong-won standing by Arab and African issues in all international forums, as a brave man who does not fear the truth of anyone. We are following the progress and prosperity taking place in Korea in continuation of the journey of giving undertaken by President Kim Il Sung and the respected Leader Kim Jong Il.

Long live Arab-Korean friendship

Long live African-Korean friendship

Together hand in hand and heart in heart
